HELS is for school leadership teams who are in the process of designing, implementing, or perfecting a strategic plan. Thought leader, Laura McBain, who works closely with schools and districts around the world to develop reform initiatives centering around 21st century learning, school development and professional development, will lead us through the day focused on school change. We will have an expert panel intimately connected to Hawaii's School Transformation Efforts including First Lady Dawn Ige, Waipahu HS Principal Keith Hayashi and Ian Kitajima, Senior Executive at Oceanit and Design Thinking Guru. Explore your operational goals or other pertinent topics with each other and local and national experts on school change, pedagogy, technology integration and 21st century skills, in roundtable sessions. Whether you are implementing or developing school learning initiatives this Summit will bring together great ideas and people to help you draft and enact concrete steps to implement your vision!

Laura McBain is the Director of External Relations and the Director of Education Leadership Academy at High Tech High in San Diego. Laura was a founding teacher of High Tech Middle and was the principal of two HTH sites and has worked in comprehensive schools prior to her work at HTH. As the Director of External Relations, Laura conducts the HTH GSE Residencies, Institutes and off-campus workshops. She also works closely with external schools and districts to develop school reform initiatives centering around 21st century learning, charter school development and professional development. As the Director of Education Leadership Academy, Laura works with teams of educators looking to transform their schools through the use of change leadership, deeper learning practices and equity structures. She has B.A. in English and minors in Political Science and Spanish from Miami University and an Ed.M. in Education Policy and Management from the Harvard Graduate School of Education.
